For this purpose, cases are proposed and considered by the subscribers at each monthly committee, and the treasurer, together with the clergy in their several parishes, has the privilege of advancing sums on account of the society in the interval between the meetings: the degree of relief is apportioned to the necessities of the sufferer, and a visitor is appointed, who not only distributes the alms, but is charged to admonish, instruct and promote by all means the spiritual welfare of the person relieved. Mr. Robinson highly valued this society, contributed much to its supplies, and found it greatly conducive to the usefulness of his ministry. Its funds have seldom exceeded one hundred pounds a year; but I question whether any hundred pounds has been laid out in the twelve months with more extensive benefit. Much praise is due to the several treasurers who have successively filled the office with all patience, disinterestedness and kindness, as well as to its mainspring and founder, Mr. Robinson. These committees recurring so frequently and in such close succession were a constant exercise of laborious self-denial to him who was their head and their life, their promoter and their conductor. It required an enlarged view to be willing to persevere in them. Many times little seemed to be done. The question would occur, Why need I go? The answer is, the institution will be...
