PROVIDE FREE MARKETS JUST OUTCOMES?

GRIN Verlag Sep 2008, 2008. Taschenbuch. Book Condition: Neu. 210x148x1 mm. This item is printed on demand - Print on Demand Neuware - Seminar paper from the year 2007 in the subject Business economics - Economic Policy, printed single-sided, grade: 1,3, Stellenbosch University (University of Stellenbosch (South Africa)), course: Modern Economic Systems and Global Capitalism, 15 entries in the bibliography, language: English, abstract: Not only in economics people often talk about markets in fairly different circumstances. What does that mean? The Britannica Online Encyclopedia serves us with the following definition: A market is a means by which the exchange of goods and services takes place as a result of buyers and sellers being in contact with one another, either directly or through mediating agents or institutions. 1 What they call means could also be named as a social arrangement. Analogously to the physical location of a street market every other form of market is a man-made institution in order to organize trade. Thereby it is in addition to the right of own property probably the most salient feature of every capitalist system. But as long as markets are not natural but social constructs, they and the way they are shaped have to be subjects of human monitoring. Although this seems self-evident from an impartial point of view, free markets and their results are often taken for granted by some economists. This article focuses on the results of markets, the so-called market outcomes. More precisely it is about the justice of market outcomes with special attention to the ideology and thought of Neoliberalism with respect to this subject. During this article I will continue along the following structure: First I will expose the possibility of market failures and distinguish these failures into traditional market failures and another form of...
