The Emergency Act also provides the Secretary of Education with authority to waive or modify any statutory or regulatory provisions related to the program in connection with a Gulf Coast hurricane disaster. FEMA assists states and local governments with the costs associated with Disaster Assistance disaster response and recovery efforts that exceed a state or locales Agencies capabilities. Grants are also provided to eligible postsecondary educational institutions to help them recover from the disaster. Some institutions of higher education are subsequently provided with referrals to SBA when seeking assistance from FEMA. For private, nonprofit institutions, SBAs disaster loans are designed to be a primary form of federal assistance. Unlike their public counterparts, private colleges must apply for low-interest, long-term disaster loans prior to seeking assistance from FEMA. Schools may apply for SBA loans, and the aggregate loan amount cannot exceed 1. 5 million. In general, the loan terms for each loan include a maximum of 30 years for repayment with interest rates of at least 4 percent. HBCU officials we interviewed reported extensive and diverse capital HBCUs Reported project needs, including construction and renovation of facilities and Substantial Capital addressing deferred maintenance, yet just over half of the available program loan capital has been borrowed. While HBCU capital project Project Needs, but needs are not well documented by national studies, the schools Only About Half of themselves have individually identified and documented them. Despite reported needs, only about a quarter of HBCUs have taken steps to Available Program participate in the program, and about half of these HBCUs became Funds...
