FIRE BELLY EARTH FEET: SYNAPTIC MUD POETRY (PAPERBACK)

Createspace Independent Publishing Platform, United States, 2015. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.Delivered in a forceful tone, this restless collection of poems charges head first into the conflicts between peace and anxiety, revenge and empathy, light and despair. Written by Katherine Wisniewski Carlsen, a Chicago native who got her start on poetry slam stages, Fire Belly Earth Feet serves up poems that are muddy, fiery, and brave. Siren Call Siren of Freedom, come to me this time. I ve followed your call through hours of corn fields. I flew friendless to a speck of land on this water planet. I ve spent thousands in smoky gas driving away from four walls. Then every time I settle, I lose your vibrato trail and develop a fever. So I ve disposed of every man to cool myself down. I ve packed and disappeared in ritual. I fed only on options. But I m tired of starving for you, lonely tease. I have too much I want to keep now. So come to me this time. Get off your rock and swim to my head to wash this panic off my brain. New American Century Along the river bank where molten lava flows far enough to cool to a steady stream of oil, I pan for termite. Saturated to the thighs in Pearlized mud, we collect the sharp red chips they left behind. Among the brave, a person can calculate the pieces as they coagulate in barrels, building towards masses, heating to a flash in time - when we catch our fresh regret, holding it so close and focused we smell its pink mist breath - the droplets resting on our palates until a new need fuels us to let...
